THE IMPORTANCE OF CORRECT INSTRUMENT CALIBRATION & PROPER TRAINING WITH AN APPROVED PROGRAM

Animal Therapy Systems is the sole exclusive distributor of the Animal Calibrated Electro-Acuscope/Myoscope Therapy System. Presently, there are only two calibrations of these instruments available which are human calibrated instruments, and animal calibrated instruments. While other distributors may tell you that it does not matter which calibration you use on animals, that is absolutely not true. This is due to the fact that the biofeedback system being used by the human-calibrated instruments is neither correct nor precise when interacting with animal tissue. The results and responses will not be nearly as effective as when the animal calibrated instruments are utilized, therefore the treatment is undoubtedly compromised when using a human calibrated instrument on animal tissue.

The animal calibrated Acuscope & Myoscope instruments far surpass the human instruments in their ability to fine tune the muscles, tendons, ligaments, fascia, and nervous system of the animal. The correct calibration is necessary in order to obtain faster, far-superior results with this therapy system. These instruments have been specifically designed to interface with animal anatomy as well as their unique metabolism and physiology. In order to treat patients properly and optimize results, the calibration is a very important factor, and something that should definitely be taken into consideration when choosing a Certified Animal Acuscope Therapist to work on your animal, or when choosing to become an Animal Acuscope Therapist yourself.

Animal Therapy Systems is also the pioneer and founder of the ORIGINAL Animal Acuscope Training/Certification Program.
